Watches The GQ Watch Guide 2017 By Simon de Burton 28 April 2017 Facebook Twitter Pinterest Celebrating a decade of definitive discourse on the panoply of product that constitutes the UK watch market, GQ Watch Guide rounds up the best mens watches to have arrived into stores in the last 12 months. We're sure you won't be disappointed. While all are covetable, our pick has to be the Richard Lange Jumping Seconds, an observationstyle piece of exceptional precision. Then Avi8 might just be the brand for you, with its fastexpanding range of vintagelook, aviationinspired models starting at 110 and topping out at less than 600. The new AV 4041 Hawker Hurricane Spinning Roundel seems rather spiffing.

A onefifthofasecond chronograph subdial sits behind an RAFstyle roundel, there's a chunky "onion" crown also topped with a roundel and the back of the 42mm case is nicely engraved with a depiction of a Hurricane. These are goodvalue, wellconceived, wellmade pieces that really are worth a look. The Seastrong range of dive watches is impressive, with the focus on a contemporary, automatic model called the Diver 300, which offers 300m water resistance, a 44mm steel case and screwdown crown and case back. It's well worth the 1,080 asking price, but you might feel inclined to spend 270 more and go for the lovely Heritage model, an upgraded version of a watch first seen in 1967. There's a whole forest of newlook Royal Oaks this season, including an openworked model with a double balance wheel and a lineup of 20,400, 42mm Offshore Diver Chronographs in fizzing orange, yellow and lime green. But nothing's as good as gold, so we're opting for the Seventiestastic, 37mm Selfwinding Royal Oak with an 18carat pinkgold case and matching bracelet. The Trainmaster World Time is a greatlooking, 41mm steel, chronometercertified watch which combines day and date indications with a worldtime function that shows the hour in 24 cities simultaneously. The dial and hands are illuminated by the signature Ball microgas tubes, which glow yellow, green and orange. Based on its colour scheme, the watches have gloss black dials, silvered chronograph counters and indicators highlighted in yellow. Watch of the collection. The Clifton Chronograph Complete Calendar might actually hold broader appeal. Offering a beautifully executed Fifties aesthetic, it combines classic blued steel hands with a moonphase display and a full calendar showing the day and month in adjacent windows below 12 o'clock, while the dates are arranged around the edge of the dial and indicated by a redtipped pointer.

Creative director Bruno Belamich recently realised a CGI design of a futuristic sports car called the AeroGT, which led to limitededition watches, and the brand is also an official sponsor of Renault Sport F1 cue a range of BRX1 skeleton watches featuring the team's yellow livery. Its deep blue dial and bezel carry gold highlights and the watch is supplied on a waxed blue alligator strap. Due out around now, it should cost about 2,800, with the nonchronograph version at approx 2,000. With the handwound, eightday movement and a platinum case, it was up for grabs for 118,000. Blancpain's slim Fifty Fathoms Bathyscape dive watch gets a new case and bezel made from plasma grey ceramic, a lustrous blue dial, and luminous hands and hour markers so you can read it in the deepest oceans. Choose from a nylon strap or one made from sail canvas. For looks, functionality and affordability, it has to be the Yachting Timer II, launched at Baselworld 2016. The 46mm case makes for a big, legible dial and easy use of the countdown function, the blackened steel case is supplied on a silicone strap with logo and the watch is water resistant to 100 metres. The selfwinding piece fetched over 2 million at Christie's. The superb new Type XXI flyback chronograph offers a slategrey dial, buff markings and a calfskin strap that gives the watch a vintage look, while the wellfinished movement can be seen through a sapphirecrystal case back a first for a Breguet aviator watch. The recent 250piece Chronoliner Limited Edition, featuring a redgold case, scratchresistant bezel and rubber strap, is delicious. Speaking of classics, the Navitimer 1884 has Breitling's famous circular sliderule bezel, a day and month aperture and a crescenttipped date pointer based on a Forties design. Limited to 1,884 pieces, the 46mm steelcased watch is 6,370 on a matching bracelet or 5,310 on a rubber strap patterned to look like an aircraft tyre.

This spawned a tranche of sailing watches, including the Oracle I sporty threehander, Oracle II sporty GMT and ACI and ACII classic chronometer and chronograph. Bremont may be plying the oceans, but its roots are in the sky. So the watch of the collection is the Boeing 100 special edition, which marks 2016's centenary of the aircraft company. It features a dial inspired by early Boeing cockpits, and the firm's totem pole logo and carbon fibre from a prototype Dreamliner are integrated into the crown. The watch will be limited to 300 pieces. As fans of the Diagono Magnesium since its launch in 2015, we're pleased to see a new chronograph version, which looks even better in its more adventurous hues, such as red and blue. The magnesium case is light and tough, making this a sports watch that's practical and interesting. Someone did when it turned up at auction in 2015, but only because it was the one astronaut Dave Scott wore for a moonwalk while commanding Apollo 15. Naturally, the brand has created a replica, for a more affordable 529. Without hesitation, we say it's the new Curv, powered by the world's first curved chronograph movement. A special version of the brand's Accutron quartz crystal effort, it's ultra slim and is claimed to be "three times as accurate" as a normal quartz movement. There are 12 in the collection, with a choice of case sizes and dress and sports versions. The Britain BBY1000 with its matte finish, 47mm steel case and muted grey dial still looks good to us. This year it unveiled no fewer than 13 entirely new watchmaking creations and two new watch families, ranging from exquisite gemset pieces to high complication models such as the Astromysterieux, in which the escapement, gear train and barrel revolve, seemingly autonomously, around the transparent dial. Genius, or what? The new Drive de Cartier is set to be a huge seller for the brand.

More conventional than 2015's Cle de Cartier with "winding key" crown, the Drive is an elegant, cushioncased watch which is available in various guises, ranging from a 65,500 pinkgold tourbillon down to the more accessible time and date model which is our "watch of the collection". It's handsome, understated and contains the inhouse 1904 MC selfwinding movement. They're ultraaccurate, selfcorrecting, powered by light, linked to your mobile, multi functional, inexpensive and tough especially the GShock subbrand. The Edifice EQB600D has a dualdial time display, a day and date calendar and a threedimensional globe which rotates once a day in sync with the earth and shows the time in the city of your choice. The attractively retro DS1 Powermatic 80 combines dresswatch looks with Certina ruggedness. The 80 refers to the hours' power reserve, and the 40mm watch comes in standard form or as a special edition that pays tribute to a 1960 model given to the first team to successfully climb the Dhaulagiri. The time has come, then, for a Chanel watch designed for gents. The aptly named Monsieur de Chanel took five years to develop. Powered by Chanel's first inhouse movement, it uses digital jumping hour and retrograde displays and will initially be available in an edition of 150 examples in beige gold and 150 in white, at 23,250 and 24,250 respectively. The Dandy, of course, just as it always has been. The black dial is enhanced with engraved gold "bayadere" stripes. To mark the occasion, the firm has created the ultrathin LUC XPS 1860, which pays homage to the first watch from the 1996 collection. The brand's longrunning sponsorship of the Mille Miglia classic car rally results in a special new model each year. It's limited to 1,000 examples, each supplied with a weathered leather band based on the look of a car bonnet strap. Since then, the directto customerselling firm has come to be taken rather more seriously by horophiles, leading to a recent rebranding and a new dial logo.

As well as the 43mm Classic, there is also a 38mm Vintage model with a highshouldered, glassbox crystal. You also get a perpetual calendar, a chronograph, a sliderule bezel and powerreserve indication, all contained in a robust, 47mm steel or titanium case. This year, it furthered the 2015 revival of the famous Bubble design originally launched in 2000 and featuring a prominent, convex crystal. Each new model is limited to 88 examples. Hoping for interest from Asia, perhaps it's nifty and costs 8,400 in titanium, or 12,600 in gold. This, we reckon, has to be the Ironside model, said to have been inspired by vintage motorcycle design. The OTime6 gives the watch a sporty, motoringorientated twist through the use of orange hands, dial highlights and a perforated black leather strap with eyecatching orange stitching. They're definitely different, and are powered by quality movements such as Zenith's El Primero. We still like the CO5, a twotimezone model in a 38mm case with a crisp white dial featuring applied gold highlights. Easy setting of the GMT hand comes by way of the push button. Check out the limitededition chronograph and the open balance wheel watches unveiled at Baselworld. Watch of the Collection. From the right distance, you could almost well, not quite be looking at a Vacheron Constantin when you see the new Tonneau Classic. The case gets a gold PVD finish, with a deep blue sunray dial and matching crocodile strap. And an open balance wheel makes it a bit more interesting. The Wave with a blue dial is now offered in automatic and quartz versions. We're utterly taken by the Elegante 48mm, which launched earlier this year. It features a cushionshaped titanium case measuring 48mm from lug tip to lug tip, and is powered by an electromechanical movement with a power reserve of eight to ten years. The new 44mm Chrono Bike, finished in bluecoloured steel with a matching dial and bracelet, is eyecatching and comes with Festina's twoyear guarantee.
